CASE NO. C10-1857JLR

ORDER ON SECOND CROSS-MOTIONS FOR PARTIAL
SUMMARY JUDGMENT

15 I. INTRODUCTION

16 This matter comes before the court on Defendants City of Seattle and Ray 17 Hoffman's (collectively, "the City") second motion for partial summary judgment (Dkt. # 18 81) and Plaintiffs Dex Media West, Inc. ("Dex"), SuperMedia, LLC ("SuperMedia"), and 19 Yellow Pages Integrated Media Association's (collectively, "the Yellow Pages 20 Companies" or "Plaintiffs") cross-motion for partial summary judgment (Dkt. # 87).
21 Having reviewed the submissions of the parties, the record, and the relevant law, the 22

1 court GRANTS the City's second motion for partial summary judgment, and DENIES 2 the Yellow Pages Companies' cross-motion.

3 II. BACKGROUND & PROCEDURAL HISTORY

4 A. The Ordinance

5 In a series of public meetings conducted between June and October 2010, the City
6 heard testimony from residents who were frustrated by the delivery of unwanted yellow 7 pages directories to their homes and complained that these deliveries violated their right
8 to privacy and pointlessly generated large amounts of waste. (Rasmussen Decl. (Dkt. # 9 30) ¶¶ 3-4; see also O'Brien Decl. (Dkt. # 32) Ex. 2 (attaching copies of complaints 10 emailed to the City).) In response, the City enacted Ordinance 123427 ("the Ordinance"), 11 which places certain regulations upon the distribution of "yellow pages phone books"¹ in 12 Seattle. First, publishers must "obtain[] an annual yellow pages phone book distributor 13 license." SMC 6.225.030. Second, publishers must pay the City fourteen cents "for each 14 yellow pages phone book distributed within the City." SMC 6.255.100(A).² Third, 15 publishers must "prominently and conspicuously display on . . . the front cover of each 16 yellow pages phone book distributed within the City" and "on their websites" a message 17 mandated by the City about the City's program for opting out of receiving phone books.

18 19 ¹ The Ordinance defines a "[y]ellow pages phone book" as "a publication that consists 20 primarily of a listing of business names and telephone numbers and contains display advertising for at least some of those businesses." SMC 6.255.025(D).

21 ² On January 31, 2011, the City amended the Ordinance to eliminate a $148 per ton 22 recovery fee for the cost of recycling that the City had originally enacted with the Ordinance.
(O'Brien Decl. Ex. 1.)

1 SMC 6.255.110. Finally, the Ordinance creates an “Opt-Out Registry . . . for residents 2 and businesses to register and indicate their desire not to receive delivery of some or all 3 yellow pages phone books.” SMC 6.255.090(A).

4 The annual license fee is $100 and must be accompanied by a statement of the 5 number and weight of yellow pages phone books the applicant distributed in the City 6 during the previous calendar year. SMC 6.255.060; SMC 6.255.080. After completion 7 of the year’s distribution of yellow pages directories, each Yellow Pages Company will 8 be required to pay a $0.14 recovery fee for each yellow pages directory it distributed in 9 the City to pay for the City’s opt-out registry. SMC 6.255.100.

10 Within 20 days of the City’s receipt of a complete license application, the City 11 “shall issue or deny the license.” SMC 6.255.050. If the City fails to act on the license 12 application within that time period, “the license is deemed issued on the last day of the 20 13 day period.” Id. If the City denies a license application and the applicant files a notice of 14 administrative appeal, the City “shall immediately issue the license applicant a temporary 15 license,” which “shall authorize the license applicant . . . to engage in the business of 16 arranging for the distribution of yellow pages phone books, in the same manner as if the 17 license had been granted, pending the Hearing Examiner’s decision.” SMC 18 6.202.280(B). Thereafter, if the Hearing Examiner affirms the license denial, “the 19 temporary license shall remain in effect pending a motion for reconsideration before the 20 Hearing Examiner,” and, if the applicant timely files a writ or review to the Superior 21 Court, the temporary license shall continue in place “until the court either issues a writ or 22 denies the writ application.” SMC 6.202.280(B)(1). Alternatively, if the Hearing

1 Examiner overturns the license denial, the City “shall immediately issue” the license.
 2 SMC 6.202.280(B)(2).

3 A publisher who fails to comply with the Ordinance may be fined, SMC 4 6.255.140(A), or lose its license, SMC 6.255.130. Specifically, the Ordinance provides 5 that “[f]ailure of a licensee to comply with the provisions of the chapter is sufficient 6 grounds for the denial, suspension or revocation of the license.” Id. The Seattle Public 7 Utilities (“SPU”) rule implementing the Ordinance specifies that:

8 For purposes of assessing performance and enforcing the requirements of 9 Ordinance 123427, the Director of [SPU] will consider seeking civil 10 penalties whenever the Director determines that the number of complaints 11 of wrongful distribution exceeds one-half of one percent (0.5%) of the 12 number of residents and businesses who filed timely opt-out requests with 13 the Registry.

14 (Praeipie (Dkt. # 55) to Lilly Decl. (Dkt. # 51) Ex. 5 ¶ 4.B.1.)

15 B. Policy Goals and Regulatory Authority Related to the Ordinance

16 In enacting the Ordinance, the City recognized the policy goal of the Washington 17 State Legislature found in RCW 70.95.010(8)(a), which directs that waste reduction 18 should be “the first priority for the collection, handling, and management of solid waste.”
 19 (Mullins Decl. (Dkt. # 17) Ex. A (Preamble to Ordinance at 1).) The City was also 20 guided by the Legislature’s finding that “[w]aste reduction must become a fundamental 21 strategy of solid waste management,” RCW 70.95.010(4), necessitating changes in 22 “waste generation behaviors to reduce the amount of waste that becomes a governmental responsibility.” (Mullins Decl. Ex. A (Preamble to Ordinance at 1(citing RCW 70.95.010(4))).) The City also acknowledged the Legislature’s directive that “[i]t is the responsibility of county and city governments to assume primary responsibility for solid waste management and to develop and implement aggressive and effective waste reduction and source separation strategies.” (Id. (citing RCW 70.95.010(6)(c)).) Two additional purposes also motivated the City to enact the Ordinance: protection of residents’ privacy from unwanted intrusions and the recovery of costs incurred to maintain and enforce the opt-out registry. (Id. Ex. A (Preamble to Ordinance at 1).)

C. State of Washington Publication Requirements for Local Exchange Company

The State of Washington requires local exchange companies (“LECs”) (e.g., Qwest and Verizon) to publish and distribute residential, business listings, and certain consumer information. See WAC 480-120-251. Specifically, the State of Washington requires that:

(1) A[n] . . . LEC . . . must ensure that a telephone directory is regularly published for each local exchange it serves, listing the name, address . . . , and primary telephone number for each customer who can be called in that local exchange and for whom subscriber list information has been provided.

(3) A[n] . . . LEC must provide each customer a copy of the directory for the customer’s local exchange area

(5) Each LEC that publishes a directory, or contracts for the publication of a directory, must print an informational listing . . . when one is requested by any other LEC providing service in the area covered by the directory

(6) Telephone directories published at the direction of the LEC must include a consumer information guide that details the rights and responsibilities of its customer. . . .

1 WAC 480-120-251.³

2 An LEC is defined as “a company providing local exchange telecommunications 3 service.” WAC 480-120-021. There is no dispute that the Yellow Pages Companies are 4 not LECs. Rather, Plaintiffs have entered into private contracts with the LECs to be the 5 exclusive publishers of the listings and information that the LECs are required by state
6 law to make available to their customers pursuant to WAC 480-120-251. (See Norton 7 Decl. (Dkt. # 18) ¶ 9; Rasmussen Decl. Exs. 5 & 6 (Dkt. # 33) (filed under seal).) Dex 8 contracts with Qwest to publish directories that satisfy the WAC requirements on 9 Qwest’s behalf, and Supermedia does the same with respect to Verizon. (Norton Decl. ¶ 10 9.)

11 D. Exceptions to the Ordinance

12 The Ordinance specifically excepts or expressly does not apply to (1) publishers of 13 less than four tons of yellow pages phone books, see SMC 6.255.025(B); (2) directories 14 distributed by local membership organizations, see SMC 6.255.025(B) & (C); and (3)
15 LECs “whose distribution of phone books in the City is limited to only those phone 16 books required by WAC 480-120-251,” see SMC 6.255.035.

17 E. Procedural History

18 19 20 ³ Washington Utilities and Transportation Commission (“WUTC”) tariffs are in accord 21 with the WAC requirements. The tariff for Qwest, the primary LEC serving Seattle, requires that 22 Qwest provide all business customers “listing in the alphabetical [i.e., white pages] and classified
[i.e., yellow pages] sections of the directory at no additional charge.” (Norton Decl. (Dkt. # 18) Ex. A.)

1 The City enacted the Ordinance in October 2010. The Yellow Pages Companies
2 filed suit on November 15, 2010, asserting claims for violations of the First Amendment
3 and the Commerce Clause of the federal Constitution, deprivation of rights actionable 4 under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, and violation of the Washington's constitution's free speech 5 clause, Wash. Const. art. I, § 5, supremacy clause, id., art. XI, § 1, and privileges and 6 immunities clause, id. art. I, § 12. (See generally, Compl. (Dkt. # 1).)

7 In January 2011, the parties filed cross-motions for partial summary judgment
8 concerning the Yellow Pages Companies' claims for violation of the First Amendment 9 and violation of the Commerce Clause. (Dkt. ## 14, 28.) On February 10, 2011, the 10 Yellow Pages Companies moved for a preliminary injunction (Dkt. # 41), and on May 5, 11 2011, they moved for a temporary restraining order (Dkt. # 64). The court denied 12 Plaintiffs' motions for preliminary injunction and temporary restraining order on May 9 13 and 11, 2011, respectively. (Dkt. ## 66, 67.)

14 On May 11, 2011, the Yellow Pages Companies filed a notice of appeal
15 concerning the court's denial of their motion for a preliminary injunction. (Dkt. # 68.)
16 They also filed a motion for preliminary injunction pending appeal (Dkt. # 69), which the 17 court denied as well (Dkt. # 72).⁴ While Plaintiffs' appeal to the Ninth Circuit 18 concerning the court's denial of their motion for preliminary injunction was pending, the 19 court denied their motion for partial summary judgment concerning their First 20 Amendment and Commerce Clause claims, and granted the City's cross-motion

21
22 ⁴ The Ninth Circuit also denied Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction pending appeal. (Dkt. # 74.)

1 regarding the same. (Dkt. # 84.) The Ninth Circuit has now requested letter briefs from 2 the parties concerning whether the pending appeal is moot in light of the court's ruling on 3 partial summary judgment concerning the First Amendment and Commerce Clause.

4 In the meantime, on June 28 and July 25, 2011, the parties filed additional cross-5 motions for partial summary judgment (Dkt. ## 81, 87) with regard to Plaintiffs' 6 remaining claims under various provisions of the Washington constitution, including (1) 7 violation of the free speech clause contained in article I, section 5; (2) violation of the 8 supremacy clause contained in article XI, section 11; and (3) violation of the privileges 9 and immunities clause contained in article I, section 12.⁵ (Compl. ¶¶ 29-34.) It is these 10 claims under the Washington constitution that the court considers now.

11 III. ANALYSIS

12 A. Summary Judgment Standard

13 Summary judgment is appropriate if the evidence, when viewed in the light most 14 favorable to the non-moving party, demonstrates "that there is no genuine dispute as to 15 any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ.
 16 P. 56(a); see Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986); Galen v. Cnty. of L.A., 17 477 F.3d 652, 658 (9th Cir. 2007). The moving party bears the initial burden of showing 18 there is no genuine issue of material fact and that he or she is entitled to prevail as a

 20 ⁵ Plaintiffs also assert a claim based on 42 U.S.C. § 1983. (Compl. ¶¶ 27-28.) Plaintiffs 21 have admitted, however, that this claim "is dependent on their First Amendment and Commerce 22 Clause claims." (Resp. (Dkt. # 87) at 1.) Because the court has already dismissed both of these claims on summary judgment (Dkt. # 84), the court likewise grants the City's motion for summary judgment concerning Plaintiffs' § 1983 claim on the same grounds as stated in its prior order.

1 matter of law. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. If the moving party meets his or her burden, 2 then the non-moving party “must make a showing sufficient to establish a genuine 3 dispute of material fact regarding the existence of the essential elements of his case that 4 he must prove at trial” in order to withstand summary judgment. Galen, 477 F.3d at 658.
 5 Here, cross-motions for summary judgment are at issue. The court “evaluate[s] each 6 motion separately, giving the nonmoving party in each instance the benefit of all 7 reasonable inferences.” ACLU of Nevada v. City of Las Vegas, 466 F.3d 784, 790-91 (9th
 8 Cir. 2006) (citations omitted); see also Friends of Columbia Gorge, Inc. v. Schafer, 624 9 F. Supp. 2d 1253, 1263 (D. Or. 2008).

10 B. The Ordinance Does Not Violate the Washington Constitution’s Free 11 Speech Clause

12 The Yellow Pages Companies assert three arguments with regard to their claim 13 that the Ordinance violates the Washington constitution’s free speech clause. First, they 14 assert that this court’s prior ruling concerning the First Amendment to the federal 15 Constitution (Dkt. # 84) represents an “unprecedented expansion of the commercial 16 speech doctrine,” “beyond its prior boundaries,” which “the Washington Supreme Court 17 likely would not follow.” (Resp. (Dkt. # 87) at 1, 6, 7.) Second, they assert that even if 18 the yellow pages directories at issue are properly categorized as commercial speech, 19 Washington courts would nevertheless apply a higher level of scrutiny than federal courts 20 do, or at least than this court did in its prior order concerning the First Amendment. (Id.
 21 at 7-9.) Finally, they argue that the Ordinance is an impermissible prior restraint on 22 speech under Washington law. (Id. at 9-11.) The City counters each of these positions,

1 and argues that summary judgment in its favor is appropriate. (Reply (Dkt. # 91) at 1-9; 2 see also Mot. (Dkt. # 81) at 5-6.) In particular, the City asserts that analysis of Plaintiffs' 3 claim under Washington's free speech clause is coterminous with an analysis of 4 Plaintiffs' claim under the First Amendment. Because the court has previously granted 5 summary judgment with regard to the latter, the City asserts that summary judgment with 6 regard to the former is appropriate as well. No party asserts that there is any material 7 factual dispute inhibiting a ruling on summary judgment with regard to this issue.

8 The court begins with an analysis concerning whether Washington has adopted 9 federal analysis with regard to commercial speech under the Washington constitution's 10 free speech clause, and concludes that it has. The court then considers whether its prior 11 order represents an expansion of the federal commercial speech doctrine such that 12 Washington courts would not follow this court's prior ruling, and concludes that it does 13 not. The court next considers whether Washington's prior restraint doctrine is applicable 14 here, and concludes that it is not. Accordingly, the court grants the City's motion for 15 partial summary judgment with regard to the Yellow Pages Companies' claim under the 16 Washington constitution's free speech clause, and denies the Yellow Pages Companies' 17 cross-motion as discussed below.

18 1. Washington Courts Apply a Federal Analysis to Commercial 19 Speech

20 The Washington Supreme Court has long held that the free speech clause 21 contained in article I, section 5 of the Washington constitution does not afford any greater 22 protection to commercial speech than does the First Amendment. Indeed, although

1 Plaintiffs declare that they are relying upon Bradburn v. North Central Regional Library
 2 District, 231 P.3d 166, 172 (Wash. 2010), for the proposition that article I, section 5, is 3 subject to independent state constitutional analysis (Resp. at 6), Bradburn makes clear 4 that no such independent analysis is required with regard to commercial speech. Id.
 5 (“This does not mean that the state provision always affords greater protection than the 6 First Amendment, however. . . . [N]o greater protection is afforded to . . . commercial 7 speech. . . .”) (internal citations omitted); see also Ino Ino, Inc. v. City of Bellevue, 937
 8 P.2d 154, 163 (Wash. 1997) (“The federal analysis also applies when confronting art. I, § 9 5 challenges to regulations of commercial speech.”).

10 Accordingly, the court’s analysis of the commercial speech doctrine in its prior 11 order concerning the First Amendment is equally applicable to the Yellow Pages 12 Companies’ assertion of a claim under the Washington constitution’s free speech clause.
 13 Because the court granted summary judgment in favor of the City with regard to 14 Plaintiffs’ First Amendment claim on the basis of the court’s analysis and application of 15 the federal commercial speech doctrine, the City is entitled to summary judgment with 16 regard to Plaintiffs’ claim under the Washington constitution’s free speech clause on this 17 same basis.⁶

 19 ⁶ Further, as the City points out, to establish that the Yellow Pages Companies deserve 20 more protection under article I, section 5, than they are entitled to under the First Amendment, 21 the Yellow Pages Companies must provide an analysis of the six interpretive principles outlined 22 in State v. Gunwall, 720 P.2d 808, 811 (Wash. 1986). Those criteria include: (1) the textual language, (2) differences in the texts, (3) constitutional history, (4) preexisting state law, (5) structural differences, and (6) matters of particular state or local concern. Id. As the Washington Supreme Court stated in State v. Furman, 858 P.2d 1092, 1098 (Wash. 1993):

1 2. This Court’s Prior Ruling Did Not Represent an Expansion of the 2 Commercial Speech Doctrine

3 Plaintiffs, nevertheless, repeatedly assert that the court’s prior ruling with regard 4 to the First Amendment represents an “unprecedented expansion” of the commercial 5 speech doctrine, which Washington courts would not adopt. (Resp. at 6; see also id. at 1, 6 7.) Plaintiffs have asserted that the commercial speech doctrine applies only where the 7 publisher of the material at issue is also the advertiser/seller, and that in this instance, 8 while they may be the publisher of yellow pages directories, they are neither the 9 advertiser nor the seller. (Id. at 7 (“Here, of course, the publisher is not the advertiser and 10 does not sell the advertised product, and the advertiser does not control the predominant 11 noncommercial content.”).)⁷ Plaintiffs’ argument, however, is based not only on an

12
 13 We will consider whether to apply our state constitutional provisions more strictly 14 than parallel federal provisions only when we are asked to do so, “and even then 15 only if the argument includes proper analysis of the six ‘interpretive principles’ 16 outlined in State v. Gunwall, 106 Wash.2d 54, 720 P.2d 808 (1986).”

17 Id. (footnote omitted) (quoting State v. Motherwell, 788 P.2d 1066, 1074 (Wash. 1990)); accord 18 State v. Worrell, 761 P.2d 56, 57 n.1 (Wash. 1988); State v. Wethered, 755 P.2d 797, 800-01
 19 (Wash. 1988). Here, the Yellow Pages Companies offer no such analysis, and so, for this reason 20 as well, the court appropriately confines its analysis to the federal Constitution. See Furman, 21 858 P.2d at 1098.

22 ⁷ There is no dispute that the majority of the pages of the Dex 2010 Seattle Metro Directory consist of noncommercial material. (See First SJ Order (Dkt. /# 84) at 5.) However, in its prior order, the court found that “the various noncommercial aspects of the yellow pages directories are not inextricably intertwined with the commercial aspects,” and therefore the publication as a whole is appropriately considered under a commercial speech analysis. (See id. at 16.) The court has already rejected the notion that a simple calculation based on the number of pages in a publication that can be characterized as commercial, as opposed to noncommercial, is determinative with regard to the commercial or noncommercial character of that publication.
 (Id. at 10.)

1 inaccurate characterization of the factual record before this court, but an incomplete 2 analysis of federal precedent as well.

3 The court begins with the inaccurate factual assertion underpinning Plaintiffs'
4 argument. While the court recognizes that this is an issue involving complex 5 Constitutional analysis, it is troubled by counsel's apparent mischaracterization of the 6 record in an attempt to support an argument. It is simply false for Plaintiffs to assert that 7 while they may be publishers of the directories at issue, they are neither sellers nor 8 advertisers in this context. (See id.) The factual record before the court is replete with 9 evidence to the contrary. As the court noted in its prior ruling, the Dex 2010 Seattle 10 Metro Directory is flush with advertisements for Dex itself and its advertising and other 11 services. (First SJ Order (Dkt. # 84) at 9 & n. 5.) Based on the court's review, more than 12 200 pages of the Dex 2010 Seattle Metro Directory contain advertisements for Dex 13 itself.⁸ Indeed, it appears that Dex is the single largest advertiser and seller of services 14

1 (based on volume of advertising space utilized) in its own yellow pages directory. There 2 is no countervailing evidence in the record before this court. Accordingly, although Dex 3 may be a publisher of others' advertisements, under the facts presented to this court, it is 4 indisputably a seller and advertiser of its own services as well. The court will not ignore 5 the plain undisputed factual record simply because Plaintiffs persist in repeating an 6 inaccuracy.

7 In any event, even were the Yellow Pages Companies simply publishers in this 8 context, and not advertisers or sellers, it would not alter the court's First Amendment 9 analysis here. The court's prior ruling falls squarely within the Supreme Court's and the 10 Ninth Circuit's jurisprudence with regard to the commercial speech doctrine and does not 11 represent any expansion of that line of authority. Indeed, prior to 1975, commercial 12 advertisements of services or goods for sale "were considered to be outside the protection 13 of the First Amendment." Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 505 14 (1981). It was not until Virginia Pharmacy Board v. Virginia Citizens Consumer 15 Council, 425 U.S. 748 (1976), that the Supreme Court plainly held that commercial 16 speech enjoys a substantial degree of First Amendment protection. Metromedia, 453 17 U.S. at 505. Virginia Pharmacy Board, however, did not equate commercial speech with 18 other forms of speech for First Amendment purposes. Id. From that time forward, all of

1 commercial speech differently for purposes of First Amendment analysis – permitting 2 regulation of the former where the later could not be regulated. See id. at 505-06.

3 Plaintiffs’ argument that the commercial speech at issue here should be treated 4 differently based on the status of the speaker (whether publisher, seller, or advertiser) is 5 incorrect. The Supreme Court has declared that “[i]f commercial speech is to be 6 distinguished, it ‘must be distinguished by its content.’” Id. at 505, n. 11 (quoting Va.
7 Pharmacy Bd., 425 U.S. at 761); see also Bates v. State Bar of Ariz., 433 U.S. 350, 363 8 (1977). Further, contrary to the assertions of Plaintiffs, both the Supreme Court and the 9 Ninth Circuit (as well as other federal circuit courts) have applied the commercial speech 10 doctrine where the speaker is merely the publisher of the content and not the seller or 11 advertiser. For example, in Metromedia, an action brought by billboard owners, a 12 majority of the Supreme Court found that traffic safety or aesthetic considerations were 13 sufficient to justify a content-neutral ban on all outdoor advertising signs, 14 notwithstanding the extent to which such signs convey First Amendment protected 15 messages. See, e.g., Metromedia, 453 U.S. at 507-08 (plurality opinion); id. at 552-53
16 (Stevens, J., dissenting in part); id. at 559-61 (Burger, C.J., dissenting); id. at 570 17 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting). Further, the Ninth Circuit has repeatedly applied the 18 commercial speech doctrine to advertisements published on billboards where the plaintiff 19 is neither the advertiser nor the product’s seller. See, e.g., World Wide Rush, LLC v. City 20 of L.A., 606 F.3d 676 (9th Cir. 2010) (in an action by the lessors of advertising space, the 21 Ninth Circuit upheld a freeway facing sign ban based on commercial speech doctrine 22 analysis); Metro Lights, LLC v. City of Los Angeles, 551 F.3d 898 (9th Cir. 2009) (in an

1 action brought by a company owning and operating outdoor signs, the Ninth Circuit
 2 upheld a ban on offsite commercial advertising based on commercial speech doctrine 3 analysis); see also Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc. v. City of N.Y., 594 F.3d 94 (2d Cir.
 4 2010) (in an action by owners of billboards and panel signs, the Second Circuit upheld 5 zoning resolution restricting outdoor advertising signs near highways based on 6 commercial speech doctrine analysis).⁹ Thus, Plaintiffs' assertion that this court 7 somehow extended the commercial speech doctrine "well beyond prior decisions" by 8 applying the doctrine to a matter involving a publisher of commercial speech rather than 9 solely an advertiser or seller (Resp. at 7) is incorrect.

10 Finally, the court notes that the Yellow Pages Companies also have repeatedly 11 asserted that the commercial speech doctrine should not apply to them because like 12 newspapers (which indisputably are entitled to the highest level of protection under the 13 First Amendment) the distribution of the noncommercial content in their directories is 14 funded by advertising.¹⁰ (See Resp. at 4 (Like newspapers and magazines, . . . yellow 15

16 ⁹ In addition, Yellow Pages Companies have also asserted that the court's prior ruling 17 represents an expansion of the commercial speech doctrine because the regulation at issue is not 18 aimed at "preventing fraud." (Resp. at 6 n. 2.) However, there is nothing in any of these cases to 19 suggest that the commercial speech doctrine may only be applied to regulations aimed at preventing fraud in commercial transactions. Indeed, the governmental interest at issue in billboard cases is generally traffic safety and aesthetics. See, e.g., Metromedia, 453 U.S. at 508-10; World Wide Rush, 606 F.3d at 687; Metro Lights, 551 F.3d at 904.

20 ¹⁰ "Commercial speech does not retain its commercial character "when it is inextricably 21 intertwined with otherwise fully protected speech." Riley v. Nat'l Fed'n of the Blind of N.C., 22 Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 796 (1988). In its prior order on partial summary judgment, however, the court found that because the commercial and noncommercial aspects of the yellow pages directories were not "inextricably intertwined," the publication as a whole should be analyzed under the commercial speech doctrine. (See First SJ Order at 11-16.)

pages publishers turn[] to advertising to cover the costs of printing and distribution.”.)

As the court has previously noted, Plaintiffs’ attempts to liken themselves to newspapers is a stretch too far, particularly in light of the historic role that newspapers have played in the formation and life of our democracy. (First SJ Order at 14-16.) “Although the boundary between commercial and noncommercial speech has yet to be clearly delineated,” Mattel, Inc. v. MCA Records, Inc., 296 F.3d 894, 906 (9th Cir. 2002), it is enough for our purposes here that common sense dictates that these two forms of expression – yellow pages directories and newspapers – are distinct. See Bolger v. Youngs Drugs Prods. Corp., 463 U.S. 60, 64 (1983) (application of the commercial speech doctrine must rest on “commonsense distinction[s]” between speech that is commercial in nature and other varieties of speech).

“The uniqueness of each medium of expression has been a frequent refrain.” Metromedia, 453 U.S. at 501 n.8. As the Ninth Circuit stated when addressing a First Amendment challenge to a restriction on billboards:

Courts have “often faced the problem of applying the broad principles of the First Amendment to unique forms of expression. . . . Each method of communicating ideas is a law unto itself and that law must reflect the differing natures, values, abuses and dangers of each method. We deal here with the law of billboards.” Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 500-01 . . . (1981) (citations, footnote, and internal quotation marks omitted).

1 World Wide Rush, 606 F.3d at 684. While the court in World Wide Rush dealt with the 2 law of billboards, this court deals with the law of yellow pages directories, and not the 3 law of newspapers.¹¹

4 There is nothing in the court's prior order with regard to the First Amendment, 5 which represents an expansion of the Supreme Court's or the Ninth Circuit's 6 jurisprudence. The court's order falls squarely within the well-defined parameters of 7 prior precedent addressing the commercial speech doctrine. Because Washington courts 8 have adopted federal precedent with regard to challenges concerning commercial speech 9 under the Washington constitution's free speech clause, there is no reason to find that 10 Washington courts would analyze the commercial speech issues any differently than this 11 court did in its prior order.

12 3. Washington's Prior Restraint Doctrine is Inapplicable to the 13 Ordinance's License Requirement

14 In their first motion for summary judgment, Plaintiffs asserted that even if the 15 City's licensing system passes muster under the federal Constitution, it does not survive 16 under the Washington constitution's prohibition against prior restraints. (See Plaintiffs' 17 First SJ Mot. (Dkt. # 84) at 17.) Because the court has already rejected this argument 18 (see First SJ Order at 20 n.7), Plaintiffs are not entitled to raise it again in this motion.¹²

 20 ¹¹ See also Se. Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 557 (1975) ("Each medium of 21 expression . . . must be assessed for First Amendment purposes by standards suited to it. . . .");
 22 Berger v. City of Seattle, 569 F.3d 1029, 1973 (9th Cir. 2009) (Kozinski, Chief J., dissenting) ("Context is everything in First Amendment analysis.").

¹² The court notes that the deadline for a motion for reconsideration has long since passed. See Local Rules W.D. Wash. CR 7(h)(2).

1 Nevertheless, because both sides have provided considerably more briefing on the issue, 2 the court reconfirms its prior ruling and provides the parties with a more detailed 3 analysis.

4 Despite their assertion that Washington's prior restraint doctrine renders the 5 licensing provision of the Ordinance unconstitutional, Plaintiffs fail to cite a single 6 Washington case holding that Washington's prior restraint doctrine applies to commercial 7 speech. In their first motion for partial summary judgment, Plaintiffs based their 8 argument on O'Day v. King County, 749 P.2d 142 (Wash. 1988). (Plaintiffs' First SJ 9 Mot. at 17.) O'Day involved free speech claims by nude and seminude dancers who 10 were being prosecuted for working in violation of a county's obscenity ordinance. Id. at 11 144. Although the Washington Supreme Court ultimately denied the dancers' free 12 speech claims, the court stated that "[u]nlike the First Amendment, article I, section 5 13 categorically rules out prior restraints on constitutionally protected speech under any 14 circumstances." Id. at 146-47. In rejecting the Yellow Pages Companies' initial prior 15 restraint argument, this court noted that the Washington Supreme Court later held that 16 Washington's constitution affords no greater protection to commercial speech than does 17 the First Amendment. (First SJ Order at 20 n.7 (citing Ino Ino, 937 P.2d at 163).)
18 Accordingly, the court employed the Central Hudson standards for commercial speech¹³
19 and did not engage in a prior restraint analysis. (See id. at 16-23.)

21
22 ¹³ See Cent. Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n of N.Y., 447 U.S. 557 (1980).

1 The Washington Supreme Court's decision in National Federation of Retired 2 Persons v. Insurance Commissioner, 838 P.2d 680 (Wash. 1992), also supports the 3 conclusion that the Washington Supreme Court would analyze the Ordinance here in a 4 manner consistent with the court's prior First Amendment ruling. In National 5 Federation, the Washington Supreme Court upheld a licensing requirement that applied 6 to insurance solicitations, finding that the permitting scheme need only satisfy the 7 commercial speech doctrine under Central Hudson test to pass muster under both the 8 First Amendment and under article I, section 5 of the Washington constitution. Id. at 9 686-88 (repeatedly citing Central Hudson, 447 U.S. 557). Thus, this court's prior 10 analysis of the free speech and licensing issues surrounding the City's Ordinance based 11 on the commercial speech doctrine formulated in Central Hudson (see Dkt. # 84) is 12 consistent with the Washington Supreme Court's analysis of similar issues in National 13 Federation.

14 The National Federation court found that a licensing requirement, while not the 15 sole method for addressing the problem of fraud in the insurance business, did directly 16 advance the State's interest. Id. Specifically, the National Federation court stated:

17 Requiring licenses for insurance solicitors or those engaging in insurance 18 solicitations enables the Insurance Commissioner to monitor the content 19 and quality of insurance information distributed in Washington, as well as 20 the identity of those distributing the information. Licensing is also a 21 means of providing accountability for those in the insurance business in 22 this state.

Id. Thus, like the permitting requirement in National Federation, the licensing requirement at issue here enables the City to monitor compliance and provide

1 accountability with regard to other aspects of the Ordinance such as the City's opt-out 2 system. See id.

3 The National Federation court also expressly rejected another argument advanced 4 by the Yellow Pages Companies here, namely, that the challenged regulation must be the 5 least restrictive means of serving the government's interest. (See Resp. at 8.)

6 Specifically, the National Federation court stated:

7 Appellant impliedly argues that restrictions on commercial speech must 8 constitute the least restrictive means of serving the government's interest.
9 This is not correct. There needs to be only a "fit" between the ends sought 10 by the government and the means chosen to accomplish those ends.

11 838 P.2d at 688. The National Federation court found that the licensing requirement fit 12 the government's goals by providing the state with a "useful enforcement tool" with 13 respect to regulating insurance transactions. Id. at 688-89. Here too, the licensing 14 requirement fits the City's goals by providing it with a useful enforcement tool with 15 respect to its opt-out program and other aspects of the Ordinance.

16 The Yellow Pages Companies nevertheless argue that National Federation is 17 inapposite because the National Federation court failed to expressly consider a prior 18 restraint analysis, and "silence as to whether the licensing requirement . . . was a prior 19 restraint . . . is hardly a holding." (Resp. at 10.) As the City notes, however, although the 20 National Federation court did not specifically utter the words "prior restraint," the court 21 did consider and reject application of its prior decision in O'Day, 749 P.2d 142, in which 22 it had set forth the strict prior restraint standard under article I, section 5. Nat'l Fed'n, 838 P.2d at 689.

Specifically, the National Federation court stated:

Washington case law provides no clear rule for constitutional restrictions on commercial speech. In an obscenity case, O'Day v. King Cy., this court stated that the state constitution provides greater protection for speech than the federal constitution. In a later case, this court held that at least in obscenity cases, the Washington Constitution does not provide greater protections than the federal constitution. We therefore follow the interpretative guidelines under the federal constitution. Under that test, the licensing requirement in this case does not violate article I, section 5 of the Washington Constitution.

Id. (footnotes omitted; italics in original). Thus, prior to selecting the application of federal standards for commercial speech, the Washington Supreme Court specifically considered and rejected application of the decision in which it had announced that “article I, section 5 categorically rules out prior restraints on constitutionally protected speech under any circumstances.” O'Day, 749 P.2d at 146-47.¹⁴

¹⁴ The court is not persuaded by the Yellow Pages Companies’ assertion that Kitsap County v. Mattress Outlet/Kevin Gould, 104 P.3d 1280 (Wash. 2005), “governs application of the commercial speech doctrine under the Washington Constitution.” (Resp. at 8.) First, in Mattress Outlet court’s free speech analysis was based entirely on the First Amendment of the federal Constitution and not on article I, section 5 of the Washington constitution. Id. at 1284 n. 1. Further, for the same reasons that the court previously found Plaintiffs’ analogy to City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, 507 U.S. 410 (1993) to be inapt (see First SJ Order at 21-22), the court rejects Plaintiffs’ attempts to analogize this case to Mattress Outlet, which is factually similar to and relies heavily upon Discovery Network in its analysis. See Mattress Outlet, 104 P.3d at 1285-86 (515) (“Here, as in Discovery Network, the Kitsap County ordinance distinguishes between commercial and noncommercial speech, although that distinction does not bear any relationship to the county’s interests in aesthetics and safety.”). Finally, the Mattress Outlet court found that the ordinance prohibiting persons from wearing signage did not meet the Central Hudson test because there was “no evidence” that it furthered the county’s goals of aesthetics and traffic safety. Id. at 1285 (“There is no evidence the . . . signs have any effect on traffic safety.”). Unlike the county in Mattress Outlet, here, the City has provided evidence that the Ordinance and its licensing provision advances its interests. (See, e.g., Lilly Decl. (Dkt. # 31) ¶¶ 10-11.)

Consistent with the Washington Supreme Court's analysis in National Federation, this court also rejects the notion that a prior restraint analysis under Washington's constitution is appropriate with regard to the licensing and commercial speech issues here. See also Knight v. Browne, No. C07-0738MJP, 2007 WL 2900279, at *3 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 2, 2007) ("Because the Washington Supreme Court follows the interpretive guidelines under the Federal Constitution when judging the constitutionality of licensing requirements, the Court will follow the Federal analysis with respect to [plaintiff's free speech] claims."). Accordingly, the court considers only the federal analysis with regard to the licensing and commercial speech issues raised by the Ordinance.¹⁵ Consistent with this ruling, the court grants the City's motion for partial summary judgment with respect to the Yellow Pages Companies' claim based on article I, section 5 of the Washington constitution, and denies Plaintiffs' cross-motion regarding the same.

C. The Ordinance Does Not Violate the Washington Constitution's Supremacy Clause

The Yellow Pages Companies also claim that the Ordinance violates article XI, section 11 of Washington's constitution because it "conflicts with WAC 480-120-251." (Compl. ¶ 32. Article XI, section 11 allows local governments to create "all such local police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."¹⁶ Wash.

¹⁵ The court has previously rejected the notion that the Ordinance operates as a prior restraint under federal law. (See First SJ Order at 20 n.8.)

¹⁶ The court assumes for purposes of this decision, but does not rule, that WAC 480-120-251 constitutes a "general law" within the meaning of article XI, section 11, of Washington's constitution.

1 Const. art. XI, § 11. The City and the Yellow Pages Companies have cross-moved for 2 summary judgment with regard to this claim.

3 Section 480-120-251 of Washington’s Administrative Code (“WAC”) requires 4 that every LEC “ensure that a telephone directory is regularly published for each local 5 exchange it serves” and “provide each customer a copy of the directory for the 6 customer’s local exchange area.” WAC 480-120-251. The City asserts that there is no
7 conflict between its Ordinance and this provision of the WAC because (1) its Ordinance 8 does not prohibit publication of the required material, (2) the Ordinance exempts a 9 publication that contains only the required LEC information, and (3) “there is no reason 10 why the Yellow Pages Companies cannot comply with both the . . . regulation and the 11 [City’s] Ordinance.” (Mot. at 8 (underlining in original).) The Yellow Pages 12 Companies, on the other hand, assert that the Washington Utilities and Transportation 13 Commission (“WUTC”) treats advertising revenues from the distribution of yellow pages 14 directories as a “regulatory asset,” and imputes the revenues to the LEC even when 15 published by a separate corporation. (Resp. at 1, 4-6, 12.) Thus, the Yellow Pages 16 Companies assert that the City’s Ordinance, which regulates yellow pages directories that 17 contain advertising, is in conflict with WAC 480-120-251. (Resp. at 4-6, 12.)

18 Under article XI, section 11, an ordinance may be deemed invalid in two ways: (1) 19 the ordinance directly conflicts with a state statute or (2) the legislature has manifested its 20 intent to preempt the field. Heinsma v. City of Vancouver, 29 P.3d 709, 712 (Wash.
21 2001); see also Chaney v. Fetterly, 995 P.2d 1284, 1290 n.24 (Wash. Ct. App. 2000).

22 The Yellow Pages Companies have challenged the Ordinance only upon the first of these

1 grounds. “A municipality may . . . enact an ordinance concerning the same subject 2 matter as a state law provided that . . . the ordinance does not conflict with the general 3 law of the state.” Lawson v. City of Pasco, 181 P.3d 896, 898 (Wash. Ct. App. 2008), 4 aff’d, 230 P.3d 1038 (2010) (citing King Cnty. v. Taxpayers, 949 P.2d 1260, 1274 (Wash.
 5 1997)). A local regulation conflicts with state law where it permits what state law forbids 6 or forbids what state law permits. Parkland Light & Water Co. v. Tacoma–Pierce Cnty.
 7 Bd. of Health, 90 P.3d 37, 39-40 (Wash. 2004); see also City of Seattle v. Eze, 759 P.2d 8 366, 372 (Wash. 1988). To render an ordinance unconstitutional, “a conflict [with state 9 general law] must be direct and irreconcilable.” Carrick v. Locke, 882 P.2d 173, 181 10 (Wash. 1994). “If the two may be harmonized, however, no conflict will be found.”
 11 Lawson, 230 P.3d at 1042.

12 The Washington Supreme Court presumes that an ordinance is valid unless the 13 challenger can prove the ordinance is unconstitutional. City of Pasco v. Shaw, 166 P.3d 14 1157, 1163 (Wash. 2007); HJS Dev., Inc. v. Pierce Cnty., 61 P.3d 1141, 1154 (Wash.
 15 2003); Heinsma, 29 P.3d at 712. “In establishing the constitutional invalidity of an 16 ordinance, a heavy burden rests upon the party challenging its constitutionality. Every 17 presumption will be in favor of constitutionality.” HJS Dev., Inc., 61 P.3d at 1154 18 (footnote and internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, Plaintiffs face a heavy burden in 19 establishing that the Ordinance is unconstitutional under Washington’s supremacy clause.

20 The Yellow Pages Companies are correct that the Ordinance addresses the LEC 21 publication requirement that is mandated by the WUTC regulation. (Resp. at 12.) This 22 fact alone, however, is insufficient to invalidate the Ordinance under article XI, section

1 11 of Washington's constitution. Nothing in the state's supremacy clause prohibits the 2 City from regulating on the same subject matter in different ways. More importantly, the 3 Yellow Pages Companies never explain why it would be impossible for them to comply 4 with both the WUTC regulation as well as the City's Ordinance.

5 The Yellow Pages Companies assert that a conflict exists between the Ordinance
6 and the WUTC's regulation because (1) the WUTC was aware of the fact that LECs 7 and/or those who contract with them to publish the WUTC's required information rely 8 upon advertising to defray the costs of the required publication, and (2) the WUTC has 9 imputed certain advertising income of Dex to Qwest, the LEC with which Dex contracts.
10 (Resp. at 12; see also id. at 4-6 (citing US West Commc'ns, Inc. v. Wash. Utils. & Trans.
11 Comm'n, 949 P.2d 1337 (Wash. 1997).) However, despite this apparent awareness by the 12 WUTC concerning the potential for advertising income associated with its required 13 publications, there is no evidence that the WUTC requires that advertising be included in 14 the publications, nor is there any evidence that the Ordinance prohibits publication of 15 anything that is required by the WUTC regulation. The mere fact that the WUTC may 16 have been aware that LECs or their contractors use advertising to defray the expense of 17 the required directories, or to serve as an additional profit center, is insufficient to create 18 a legislative conflict under article XI, section 11 of Washington's constitution.

19 The court also notes that the WUTC considered yellow pages advertising income 20 in setting US West's rates in 1997 only "[b]ecause US West transferred its lucrative 21 yellow pages business to its sister company, US West Direct, for inadequate 22 compensation," US West, 949 P.2d at 1344, and not because the WUTC held that future

1 yellow pages profits of a third party should have any bearing on telephone rates charged 2 by an LEC. In fact, the WUTC held to the contrary “that a fair contract between [US
3 West] and its affiliate for the sale of the [yellow pages publishing] asset would put an end
4 to any imputation of revenue.” Id. at 1345 (italics in original). “Never-ending 5 imputation” was never contemplated. See id. at 1352 (citing WUTC order). Despite the 6 amount of briefing expended on the issue by Plaintiffs, the court finds nothing in the 7 history of the WUTC’s treatment of advertising revenues that implicates article XI, 8 section 11 of the Washington constitution with regard to the City’s Ordinance.

9 As the City asserts, the Ordinance effectuates the legislative policy set forth in 10 RCW 70.95.010, which requires that “city governments [] assume primary responsibility 11 for solid waste management and [] develop and implement aggressive and effective waste 12 reduction . . . strategies.” RCW 70.95.010(6)(c). Further, the Ordinance does not 13 prohibit the publication of any information required under WAC 480-120-251. Indeed, it 14 excludes from its purview publications that contain only the information required under 15 WAC 480-120-251. See SMC 6.255.035. Specifically, the Ordinance states that 16 “[LECs] whose distribution of phone books in the City is limited to only those phone 17 books required by WAC 480-120-251 are not subject to the requirements of this chapter.” 18 Id. “Where possible, [the court] construe[s] statutes so as to preserve their 19 constitutionality.” State v. Williams, 251 P.3d 877, 879 (Wash. 2011). Accordingly, the 20 court agrees with the City that this exemption would apply to the distribution of a yellow 21 pages phone book that contained only those elements required under WAC 480-120-251 22 irrespective of whether the phone book was distributed directly by the LEC itself or by an

1 agent or contractor of the LEC, such as Plaintiffs Dex and SuperMedia. (See Mot. at 8; 2 Reply (Dkt. # 91) at 10.) Further, even if not exempted, Plaintiffs cite no evidence 3 supporting the conclusion that it is impossible for them to comply with both WAC 480-4 120-251 and the Ordinance. (See generally, Resp. at 11-14.) The Ordinance and WAC
 5 480-120-251 “can each operate distinctly without inconsistency.” See Lawson, 181 P.3d 6 at 900. Thus, the court finds, based on the undisputed record before it, that there is no 7 irreconcilable conflict between the Ordinance and WAC 480-120-251, and therefore 8 grants summary judgment with respect to Plaintiffs’ claim under Washington’s 9 supremacy clause in favor of the City, and denies Plaintiffs’ cross-motion.

10 D. The Ordinance Does Not Violate the Washington Constitution’s Privileges
 11 and Immunities Clause

12 The parties have cross-moved for summary judgment with respect to Plaintiffs’ 13 claim that the Ordinance violates article I, section 12 of the Washington constitution.
 14 (Compl. ¶ 34.) Article I, section 12 provides that “[n]o law shall be passed granting to 15 any citizen, class of citizens, or corporation other than municipal, privileges or 16 immunities which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens, or 17 corporations.” Wash. Const., art. I, § 12.

18 The Yellow Pages Companies assert that the Ordinance violates the privileges and 19 immunities clause of the Washington constitution “by singling out yellow pages for a 20 regulatory scheme . . . , while imposing no such restriction on similarly situated entities 21 that publish analogous materials and distribute them in the same way.” (Resp. at 15.)
 22 Plaintiffs, however, rely upon older Washington cases from the early Twentieth

1 Century,¹⁷ which the Washington Supreme Court has since largely abandoned – albeit 2 never expressly overruled. See Michael Bindas, Seth Cooper, David K. DeWolf &
 3 Michael J. Reitz, The Washington Supreme Court and the State Constitution: A 2010
 4 Assessment, 46 Gonz. L. R. 1, 27 (2010-2011). As discussed below, more pertinent 5 developments in Washington constitutional jurisprudence, as it pertains to the state’s 6 privileges and immunities clause, have occurred since that time.

7 As described by recent commentators, in the second half of the Twentieth Century, 8 the Washington Supreme Court began routinely conflating the Washington constitution’s 9 privileges and immunities clause with the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth 10 Amendment of the federal Constitution. See id. at 26 (citing Seeley v. State, 940 P.2d 11 604, 610 (Wash. 1997); State v. Smith, 814 P.2d 652, 660 (Wash. 1991)). Accordingly, 12 in reviewing economic legislation, the Washington Supreme Court began applying a 13 standard similar to federal courts considering equal protection challenges to economic 14 legislation, namely a “rational basis” test. Id. at 27 (citing Amer. Network, Inc. v. Wash.
 15 Utils. & Transp. Comm’n, 776 P.2d 950, 960 (Wash. 1989)).

16 Washington courts have recently reaffirmed their reliance upon the “rational 17 basis” test when considering equal protection challenges under article I, section 12 of the 18 Washington constitution to social or economic legislation that does not implicate a 19 suspect or semi-suspect class or a fundamental or important right. See, e.g. State v.

21 ¹⁷ (See Resp. at 14 (citing Pearson v. City of Seattle, 90 P.2d 1020 (Wash. 1939); City of 22 Seattle v. Dencker, 108 P. 1086 (Wash. 1910); City of Spokane v. Macho, 98 P. 755 (Wash.
 1909)).)

1 Hirschfelder, 242 P.3d 876, 883 (Wash. 2010) (“Absent a fundamental right or suspect
2 class, or an important right or semi-suspect class, a law will receive rational basis
3 review.”); King Cnty. Dept. of Adult & Juvenile Detention v. Parmelee, 254 P.3d 927, 4 938 (Wash. Ct. App. 2011) (“The challenged classification need only be rationally related 5 to a legitimate state interest unless it violates a fundamental right or is drawn upon a 6 suspect classification such as race, religion or gender.”); In re Parentage of K.R.P. &
7 K.H.R.P., 247 P.3d 491, 498 (Wash. Ct. App. 2011).

8 In 2004, the Washington Supreme Court held for the first time that the state’s 9 privileges and immunities clause, at least in some instances, “requires a separate and 10 independent constitutional analysis from the equal protection clause of the United States 11 Constitution.” Grant Cnty. Fire Protection Dist. No. 5 v. City of Moses Lake, 83 P.3d
12 419, 428 (Wash. 2004). As the court elaborated two years later, however, an independent 13 analysis is only required where “the challenged law is a grant of positive favoritism to a 14 minority class,” and not where law is being challenged on the basis of a violation of equal 15 protection. Anderson v. King Cnty., 138 P.3d 963, 972 (Wash. 2006) (plurality opinion).
16 Specifically, the court stated:

17 As we concluded in Grant County . . . , the concern underlying the state 18 privileges and immunities clause, unlike that of the equal protection clause, 19 is undue favoritism, not discrimination, and the concern about favoritism 20 arises where a privilege or immunity is granted to a minority class (“a 21 few”). Therefore, an independent state analysis is not appropriate unless 22 the challenged law is a grant of positive favoritism to a minority class. In other cases, we will apply the same analysis that applies under the federal equal protection clause.

Id. Although it appears that Plaintiffs are asserting an equal protection claim which 1 would not require an independent analysis under article I, section 12, they do not 2 expressly specify the precise nature of the claim (i.e. whether it is based on a grant of 3 positive favoritism to a minority class or on a violation of their right to equal protection).

 4 (See generally, Resp. at 14-15.) Thus, the court considers Plaintiffs' article I, section 12 5 claim under both the separate state analysis suggested in Grant County, as well as under a 6 federal equal protection analysis.¹⁸

7 When considering whether Washington's constitution provides greater protection 8 than the federal constitution, Washington court's engage in a two-step analysis. First, the 9 court determines whether a provision of the state constitution should be given an 10 interpretation independent from that given to the corresponding federal constitutional 11 provision. Am. Legion Post # 149 v. Wash. State Dep't of Health, 192 P.3d 306, 324 12 (Wash. 2008). However, this step in the analysis is unnecessary here because the 13

 14 ¹⁸ In another later plurality opinion, the Washington Supreme Court appears to disavow 15 the earlier plurality's conclusion in Anderson, 138 P.3d at 972, that "an independent state 16 analysis is not appropriate unless the challenged law is a grant of positive favoritism to a 17 minority class." In Madison v. State, 163 P.3d 757 (Wash. 2007), the plurality states that "Grant 18 County . . . did not impose this limitation on its determination that article I, section 12 warrants 19 an independent analysis from the equal protection clause of the United States Constitution." Id.
 20 This court, however, notes that three years later in Hirschfelder, a majority of the Washington 21 Supreme Court applied only a federal analysis to an equal protection claim brought under both 22 article I, section 12 and the Fourteenth Amendment. Hirschfelder, 242 P.3d at 883-84. While the Hirschfelder court did so without any discussion of the issue raised by the plurality opinions in Anderson and Madison, the fact that a majority of the court analyzed an equal protection claim under article I, section 12 without first engaging in an independent analysis under the state constitution indicates to this court that Anderson now represents the correct analysis on this issue in Washington. In any event, the issue is irrelevant to the determination here because the court engages in both an independent analysis of Plaintiffs' claim under Washington's constitution, as well as a federal equal protection analysis, and concludes that Plaintiffs' claim under article I, section 12 fails under both.

1 Washington Supreme Court has already established that the privileges and immunities 2 clause warrants a separate constitutional analysis. Id. The second step in the analysis, 3 and the only one the court need consider here, is a determination regarding “whether the 4 provision in question extends greater protections for the citizens of this state.” Id.
5 (quoting Madison, 163 P.3d at 764).

6 In applying this second step of the analysis, the court finds the decision in 7 American Legion, 192 P.3d 306, to be instructive. Like the Yellow Pages Companies, the 8 plaintiff in American Legion believed that it was being treated differently than similarly 9 situated businesses by a government regulation and that the regulation therefore violated 10 the state’s privileges and immunities clause. Id. at 325. Specifically, a chapter of the 11 American Legion challenged a statewide regulation that banned smoking in places of 12 employment, arguing, among other things, that it violated the privileges and immunities 13 clause by treating similarly situated businesses differently – such as by allowing smoking 14 in hotels, but not in other establishments. Id. at 312.

15 Critical to the court’s analysis in American Legion was the proper characterization 16 of the privilege at issue. See id. at 325-26. The Yellow Pages Companies assert that the 17 Ordinance here implicates one of their fundamental rights – namely the right “to carry on 18 business.” (See Resp. at 15 (“[T]he Ordinance violates the Washington Privileges and 19 Immunities Clause by singling out yellow pages for a regulatory scheme that threatens 20 Plaintiffs’ fundamental right to carry on business, while imposing no such restriction on 21 similarly situated entities that publish analogous materials and distribute them in the same 22 way.”).)

1 In Grant County, the Washington Supreme Court defined the terms “privileges 2 and immunities” under the Washington constitution as

3 pertain[ing] alone to those fundamental rights which belong to the citizens 4 of the state by reason of such citizenship. These terms, as they are used in 5 the constitution of the United States, secure in each state to the citizens of all 6 states the right to remove to and carry on business therein; the right, by usual 7 modes, to acquire and hold property, and to protect and defend the same in the 8 law; the rights to the usual remedies to collect debts, and to enforce other personal 9 rights; and the right to be exempt, in property or persons, from taxes or burdens 10 which the property or persons of citizens of some other state are exempt from. . . .
11 By analogy these words as used in the state constitution should receive a like 12 definition and interpretation as that applied to them when interpreting the federal 13 constitution.

14 83 P.3d at 428-29 (citations omitted; italics added). Thus, “the right to . . . carry on 15 business” is a fundamental right belonging to the citizens of Washington State. Id. The 16 Grant County court cautioned, however, that “not every statute authorizing a particular 17 class to do or obtain something involves a ‘privilege’ subject to article I, section 12.” Id.

18 Like the Yellow Pages Companies, the plaintiff in American Legion argued that 19 the fundamental right at issue with respect to the state’s regulation that banned smoking 20 in workplaces was its right “to remove and to carry on business therein.” Am. Legion, 21 192 P.3d at 325. While the American Legion court agreed that the right to carry on 22 business is a privilege for purposes of article I, section 12, the court disagreed that this privilege was at issue as a result of the state-wide smoking regulation or its exemptions.
Id. at 325-26. The court noted that unlike earlier decisions in which the court had struck regulatory ordinances “that effectively prohibited nonresidents from engaging in the [relevant] business,” the act at issue “d[id] not prevent any entity from engaging in business.” Id. at 325. Instead, the court noted that the regulation merely prohibited

1 smoking within a place of employment. Id. The court concluded that smoking in one's 2 workplace is not a fundamental right of citizenship, and therefore also not a privilege for 3 purposes of article I, section 12. Id. at 325-26. Accordingly, the American Legion court 4 found that because there was no privilege involved, there was also no violation of article 5 I, section 12. Id. at 326.

6 Just as the plaintiffs in American Legion asserted the right to carry on business as 7 the fundamental right at issue in relation to the state's regulation of work-place smoking 8 and its exceptions, so, too, do the Yellow Pages Companies assert the right to carry on 9 business as the fundamental right at issue in relation to the City's Ordinance and its 10 exceptions. (See Resp. at 14-15.) Contrary to Plaintiffs' assertions, however, this right is 11 not implicated by the City's Ordinance. See, e.g., Am. Legion, 192 P.3d at 325. As in 12 American Legion, nothing in the Ordinance at issue here prevents Plaintiffs from 13 engaging in or carrying on business. See id. Rather, it simply imposes certain business 14 regulations upon Plaintiffs, such as licensing and waste recovery fees, the submission of 15 annual reports, and compliance with the City's opt-out program. See, e.g., SMC
16 6.255.050-060 (license application and fee); SMC 6.255.100 (recovery fee); SMC 17 6.255.080 (annual reports); SMC 6.255.090 (opt-out registry).

18 As the City points out, there is no fundamental right to deliver yellow pages 19 directories to the doorsteps of residents who do not want them. See Rowan v. Post Office 20 Dep't, 397 U.S. 728, 738 (1970) ("We categorically reject the argument that a vendor has 21 a right . . . to send unwanted material into the home of another."). Nor can the court find 22 any basis for the existence of a fundamental right to employ an industry-sponsored

1 yellow pages opt-out mechanism instead of the City's opt-out program,¹⁹ to avoid 2 licensing or recovery fees, or to avoid the submission of the type of annual reports
 3 required by the Ordinance. Accordingly, similar to the American Legion court, this court 4 holds that because there is no fundamental right that is implicated by the Ordinance, there 5 is no violation of article I, section 12 under the independent analysis given to that clause 6 by the Washington Supreme Court.

7 The court now turns to an equal protection analysis of article I, section 12, which 8 is consistent with federal law. See Anderson, 138 P.3d 963, 973 (Wash. 2006) (where 9 plaintiffs allege discrimination, "we apply the same constitutional analysis that applies 10 under the equal protection clause of the United States constitution."). Where, as here, 11 there is no fundamental right or suspect class at issue,²⁰ Washington courts have 12 repeatedly held that the type of business or economic regulations at issue in this case are 13 to be evaluated under a rational relation test when considering an equal protection 14 challenge under article I, section 12 of the Washington constitution. See, e.g.
 15 Hirschfelder, 242 P.3d at 883 ("Social and economic legislation that does not implicate a 16 suspect class or fundamental right is presumed to be rational."); In re Parentage of 17 K.R.P., 247 P.3d at 498 (same); Bullseye Distributing LLC v. State of Wash. Gambling 18 Comm'n, 110 P.3d 1162, 1167 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005) ("The regulation of an economic

19 20 ¹⁹ Further, the court can find nothing in the Ordinance that would prohibit Plaintiffs from 21 continuing to utilize their own opt-out systems in tandem with the City's opt-out system if they 22 so chose.

²⁰ The Yellow Pages Companies have not alleged that they belong to a suspect or semi-suspect class. (See generally, Resp. at 14-15.)

enterprise is a non-fundamental right subject to rational basis scrutiny.”). Further, “[s]ocial and economic legislation that does not implicate a suspect class or fundamental right is presumed to be rational,” and this presumption may be overcome only “by a clear showing that the law is arbitrary and irrational.” Hirschfelder, 242 P.3d at 883 (quoting Am. Legion, 192 P.3d at 326). “In Washington, it is well established that . . . a statute’s challenger has a heavy burden to overcome that presumption; the challenger must prove that the statute is unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt.” In re Parentage of K.R.P., 247 P.3d at 498-99 (quoting Sch. Dists.’ Alliance for Adequate Funding of Special Educ. v. State, 244 P.3d 1, 4 (Wash. 2010)).

A regulation or legislative distinction will withstand a rational relation analysis if
 (1) all members are treated alike, (2) there is a rational basis for treating differently those within and without the class, and (3) the classification is rationally related to the purpose of the legislation. Hirschfelder, 242 P.3d at 883 (citing Am. Legion, 192 P.3d at 326).

The Washington Supreme Court has further delineated the parameters of a rational relation analysis as follows:

In reviewing the statute, the court may assume the existence of any conceivable state of facts that could provide a rational basis for the classification. . . . The classification need not be made with mathematical nicety, and its application may result . . . in some inequality. . . . It is no requirement of equal protection that all evils of the same genus be eradicated or none at all. . . .

Am. Legion, 192 P.3d at 326 (internal citations and quotations omitted).

Applying the rational basis standard, Plaintiffs’ claim under article I, section 12 of the Washington constitution fails. Plaintiffs have failed to meet their steep burden of clearly demonstrating beyond a reasonable doubt that the Ordinance “is arbitrary and 1 irrational.” Hirschfelder, 242 P.3d at 883. Indeed, Plaintiffs cite no evidence in support 2 of their assertions that other types of unsolicited publications, such as “free newspapers,” 3 “advertising shoppers,” “flyers,” or “other business solicitations,” although unregulated, 4 are “similarly situated.” (See Resp. at 14-15.)²¹ Plaintiffs submit no evidence that these 5 types of publications are analogous materials, are distributed in analogous ways, or have 6 analogous environmental or privacy impacts. Absent any such showing, Plaintiffs cannot 7 sustain their burden with regard to this claim.

8 The City, however, asserts that directories published by membership organizations 9 for their members, see SMC 6.255.025(B), by definition are not similarly situated with 10 yellow pages directories whose delivery is unsolicited. The court agrees. Further, yellow 11 pages directories and other forms of “junk mail” are not similarly situated due to the 12 City’s concern (which is unchallenged by Plaintiffs) that it could not directly regulate 13 mail due to federal preemption. (Reply at 12 (citing Reply to City’s First SJ Mot. (Dkt. # 14 43) at 7-8 & n.8).)²² In addition, the exception in the Ordinance for publishers who 15 distribute less than four tons of yellow pages phone books, see SMC 6.255.025(B), 16 rationally relates to the Ordinance’s purpose of waste reduction. As the Washington

17
 18 ²¹ The court relies upon “the nonmoving party to identify with reasonable particularity 19 the evidence that precludes summary judgment,” and is not obligated to “scour the record in 20 search of a genuine issue of triable fact.” Keenan v. Allan, 91 F.3d 1275, 1279 (9th Cir. 1996) 21 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

22 ²² The court also notes that the form of delivery of yellow pages directories (which are hand delivery to a homeowner’s doorstep) differs from junk mail (which of course arrives in a homeowner’s mailbox), a distinction that may rationally relate to residents’ privacy concerns.
See KMS Fin. Servs., Inc. v. City of Seattle, 146 P.3d 1195, 1200 (Wash. Ct. App. 2006) (“[A] classification based solely on a different method of operation of a particular kind of business is permissible.”) (quoting Sonitrol N.W., Inc. v. City of Seattle, 528 P.2d 474, 477 (Wash. 1974)).

1 Supreme Court has stated, “it is no requirement of equal protection that all evils of the 2 same genus be eradicated or none at all.” Am. Legion, 192 P.3d at 326. Under the 3 rational relation test, the court finds that the City’s decision to regulate the largest 4 contributors to the waste issue surrounding yellow pages directories while exempting the 5 smaller players creates no constitutional infirmity. See, e.g., City of Seattle v. Rogers 6 Clothing for Men, Inc., 787 P.2d 39, 50-51 (1990) (upholding disparate tax treatment for 7 large department stores and small individual retailers).

8 Finally, the court can find no basis for overturning the Ordinance due to the 9 exception for LECs “whose distribution of phone books in the City is limited to only 10 those phone books required by WAC 480-120-251.” SMC 6.255.035. The court finds 11 that the City’s exemption for distributions that are “limited to only those phone books 12 required by WAC 480-120-251” is rationally based on the state’s regulation in this area.
13 Further, as previously noted, the court interprets this exception to apply irrespective of 14 whether the LEC’s distribution of qualifying yellow pages phone books occurs directly or 15 through an agent or contractor. See supra at 27-28. Accordingly, the exemption would 16 apply to qualifying yellow pages phone books distributed by Plaintiffs on behalf of LECs 17 with whom Plaintiffs contract to publish the information required under WAC 480-120-18 251. Based on the forgoing analysis, the court grants the City’s motion for summary 19 judgment with respect to Plaintiffs’ claim under article I, section 12 of the Washington 20 constitution, and denies Plaintiffs’ cross-motion regarding the same.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the court GRANTS the City's second motion for partial summary judgment with regard to Plaintiffs' claims under the free speech clause, the supremacy clause, and the privileges and immunities clauses of the Washington constitution, as well as 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (Dkt. # 81), and DENIES the Yellow Pages Companies' cross-motion with regard to these same claims (Dkt. # 87).²³

²³ Plaintiffs have also requested that the court certify certain questions of state law to the Washington Supreme Court. (See Resp. at 15-16.) Such requests are within the court's sound discretion. Riordan v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 589 F.3d 999, 1009 (9th Cir. 2009). "Even where state law is unclear, resort to the certification process is not obligatory." Id. Furthermore, mere difficulty in ascertaining local law is no excuse for remitting the parties to a state tribunal for the start of another lawsuit. Id. Here, such a move would appear to be contrary to Plaintiffs' repeated requests to expedite this lawsuit. (See Dkt. ## 41, 64, 69.) Further, had Plaintiffs wanted a state court to consider their many state law claims, they could have easily filed this lawsuit in state court originally. Instead, Plaintiffs chose the federal forum. In any event, the court does not find certification of the state law issues is necessary here. Accordingly, the court DENIES Plaintiffs' request to certify any questions concerning the forgoing state law claims to the Washington Supreme Court.
